Apr 19 Update: There you go, a non-lawyer and legal blogger who knows local rules assists lawyers in correcting a hearing which could have been passed and/or contested as parties incorrectly identified - without providing legal advice - just noticing the law firm counsel who clearly reviewed and acted upon LIT's email and submitted a corrected notice.

The question is, does that email make LIT "in privity" with the HOA and Holt?

Maybe y'all can answer that, because it appears today that in all proceedings and events leading to home ownership and subsequent foreclosure actions, even the auctioneers can sue to foreclose a home in Harris County District Court.

Howdy,

We've been updating this slow-movin' HOA case involving Wyatt, and see y'all just filed for summary judgment.

That stated, there's an error in the notice of submission which has been set for Jun. 24, 2024, and this will need to be corrected by the HOA lawyers first...

We've also added a few interested parties to this email thread, in case they wish to read and comment on LIT's latest update.

Rest assured, we'll check back later and update this high profile case on LIT accordingly.

Y'all have a great day.
